

Working Mothers

by Roa'a Jabareen

Nowadays, most of married women are torn between two works: their job outside the house and looking after their children. Some of them work hard to sustain their families, whereas many of them neglect their families and care too much about their work, which sometimes leads to divorce.

Now, I am going to suggest to those working mothers some solutions and tips to overcome their dilemma. First of all, any working woman has to make her children and her husband her top priority, even when she is at work. For example, during the break, she should call her husband showing him that she really cares about him and that she waits impatiently to sit with her family. Second, working women should organize their time and devote themselves only to their family after work. They should have time to sit with their children and listen to their problems; they should cook for them delicious food and take lunch with them; they should save some energy to play with them, and not come home tired and exhausted by their work outside the house. Moreover, working women should not forget to take a vacation away from their tedious work.

There is nothing deserves your energies and love like your family. And to always remember, the main goal of your job is to sustain your family, this warm lap, and not to ruin it!
